Two or Three Sides to Every Story — "THE VIETNAM WAR"

RALEIGH, N.C. — The New York Times has called Ken Burns the most accomplished documentary filmmaker of his generation, and you may have seen one of his famed series, including "The Civil War" (1990), "Jazz" (2001), "The War" (2007) and "The Roosevelts" (2014).

Come judge for yourself to determine if "THE VIETNAM WAR" makes your favorite list on Thursday, September 14, at 7 p.m., at the N.C. Museum of History.

Join us for a FREE preview of the latest documentary from Ken Burns and Lynn Novick three days before the 10-part series begins airing on PBS. Jeff Smith of UNC-TV will moderate the presentation, which will be followed by a panel discussion featuring the North Carolina Museum of History Associates president Charlie Silver (a Vietnam veteran), author Dan Bolger and "Lessons of Vietnam" host Bill Dixon.

It's been 44 years since America's baby boomers came home from Vietnam in 1973.

Ultimately, the war claimed more than 58,000 Americans and more than 3 million Vietnamese military and civilian lives. Burns said, "Not since the Civil War have we as a country been so torn apart. . . . We are all searching for some meaning in this tragedy."

Now that some of the controversy, anger and political dust have had time to settle, Burns and Novick tackle the Vietnam War. Their new $30 million production took more than 10 years to make and is an immersive narrative. Burns and Novick set one ground rule: "No historians or other expert talking heads."

Instead, the series will feature interviews with nearly 80 people — Americans who fought in the war and some who opposed it, along with Vietnamese combatants and civilians — as well as digitally re-mastered archival footage, home movies, and photographs taken by some of the most celebrated photojournalists of the 20th century. The series will also include audio recordings from the Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon administrations; songs that defined the era; and some original music.
